March Events

The Grove Craft Class

The March Craft Class was decorated wine bottles. We had 2 classes with a total of 30 crafty ladies. So fun to watch the creative minds at work. There were seashells, ribbon, flowers, burlap, beads and other misc. items to attach to the wine bottle. The ladies brought their own trinkets to decorate with. We had 2 classes this month due to the number of crafters. Everyone had a great time and took home a very individuality decorated wine bottle. Thanks to all the ladies who decorated wine bottles.

Snakes

This is the season for snakes to start moving in search of food and a mate. The owners of the land behind the Grove plan to thin out trees and to clean out the underbrush to avoid fires. Once the logging activity starts, all of us need to be prepared to cross paths with a snake. Remember to – LOOK for snakes in yards, flowerbeds, flowerpots around and inside the rim, patios and outside doors and to - BACK away if one is spotted. Snakes cannot hear and have poor eyesight but feel vibrations. Tap the ground and around plants with a stick to scare away before reaching your hand in flowerbeds.

Here is more information from the Alabama State Extension Agency.

AUBURN, Ala. – With warmer weather upon us, snakes and other wildlife are more active. It is not uncommon to run across a nonvenomous snake during the summer months. While venomous snakes are known as the bigger threat, nonvenomous snakes can still pose a health risk to people.

Places Snakes Are Found

As silly as it sounds, the greatest health risk nonvenomous snakes pose to humans is people hurting themselves trying to get away when they are frightened. Knowing where snakes tend to hang around can help people be alert when in these areas.

“Snakes are most likely to be found in areas that provide cover or shelter for them and their prey,” Armstrong said. “Removing these types of areas from around your house will help reduce, but not eliminate, the possibility of snakes around the home.”

Snakes May Be Aggressive

“Overall, most snakes, regardless of species, are not aggressive. However, any snake, venomous or not, may be aggressive if cornered or picked up,” Armstrong said. “Some species tend to bite more readily than others, but there is great variation even within a species.”

Don't Pick Up Snakes

When a snake comes near a home, a general first reaction is to want to move the snake far away. Armstrong said that this is the main reason people are bitten by nonvenomous snakes.

“Most bites occur when people are handling snakes,” he said. “I recommend leaving them alone if they are not venomous.”

Armstrong wrote a line to remind people about picking up snakes; “some snakes bite, but others don't. It's a chance you shouldn't take. So, in the wild don't pick 'em up and you won't make a big mistake.” As a general rule, Armstrong said that if you are in an area where snakes might be present, closed-toe shoes and long pants are a must.
